CIA Director, Highway Official Conferring Here

CPYRGHT

Allen W. Dulles, director of the Central Intelligence Agency, flew to Richmond today to visit State Highway Commissioner James A. Anderson and talk over . . . well, nobody at the highway department seemed to know just what.

Anderson was scheduled to escort Dulles to Governor Stanley's office later in the day for a discussion of . . . well, it's hard to tell.

The last time Virginia had any dealings with the CIA—dealings that were acknowledged publicly, that is—was about a year ago, when the intelligence agency first considered and then rejected a site at Langley in Fairfax County for its new $38,000,000 headquarters.

Tenth District Rep. Joel T. Broyhill said later that the agency decided against the Langley site because the community and the state were unwilling to provide highways and other utilities estimated to cost about $1,000,000.
